

VCN-01 disrupts pancreatic cancer stroma and exerts antitumor effects

Authors

Miriam Bazan-Peregrino, Rocio García-Carbonero, Berta Laquente, Rafael Álvarez, Ana Mato-Berciano, Marta Gimenez-Alejandre, Sara Morgado, Alba Rodríguez-García, María V. Maliandi, M. Carmen Riesco, Rafael Moreno, Mireia M Ginestà, Mercedes Perez-Carreras, Joan B. Gornals, Susana Prados, Sofia Perea, Gabriel Capella, Ramon Alemany, Ramon Salazar, Emma Blasi, Carmen Blasco, Manel Cascalló, Manuel Hidalgo.

Correspondence

mah4006@med.cornell.edu; mbazan@vcnbiosciences.com

In Brief

The oncolytic adenovirus VCN-01 self amplifies within cancer cells, thereby killing them, and expresses hyaluronidase. This hyaluronidase expression degrades the extracellular matrix hyaluronan, facilitating the delivery of chemotherapy and therapeutic antibodies into the tumor, and improves the antitumor effects.